

UPDATE: The motion to file was granted, and on Nov. 19, NHeLP filed the amicus brief on behalf of the American Academy of Pediatrics, APHA, and 18 other national and Florida-based organizations.

November 10, 2010 – Today, the National Health Law Program (NHeLP) submitted a motion on behalf of 22 prominent health provider and consumer organizations working nationally and in the state of Florida, requesting permission to file a “friend of the court” (amicus) brief in Florida ex rel. McCollum v. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

The case is one of the most prominent constitutional challenges to the recently enacted Affordable Care Act (ACA) health reform legislation. Among other things, the officials from Florida and other states argue that the ACA’s Medicaid expansion represents a radical and unconstitutional shift in the Medicaid program. The motion seeks to file a friend of the court brief that will place the ACA Medicaid provisions in context by providing a narrative history of the Medicaid Act, from the date of its enactment through the amendments made by the ACA.

“Challengers argue that the ACA makes an unprecedented expansion to the Medicaid program,” said Emily Spitzer, NHeLP’s Executive Director. “However, placed in context, it is clear that the ACA builds upon the well-accepted and well-understood structure of the Medicaid program. As have previous Medicaid amendments, the ACA provisions will reduce the number of uninsured people by offering them health insurance coverage and a gateway to high-quality health care.”

The Medicaid program is crucial to the constituencies served by the amici. To access the motion, please
