

HELP

1. Introduction - This document provides information about the National Health Law Program and its services. It is intended for use by individuals seeking legal assistance in health law matters.

2. Services - The program offers a variety of services, including legal consultation, advocacy, and representation. These services are provided to individuals who are unable to pay for legal services and who are facing health law issues.

3. Eligibility - To be eligible for the program's services, individuals must be U.S. citizens or permanent residents, have a household income below a certain threshold, and be unable to pay for legal services.

4. Application - To apply for the program's services, individuals must complete an application form and provide supporting documentation, such as proof of income and residency.

5. Intake - Once an application is received, the program's intake staff will review the information and determine whether the individual is eligible for services. If eligible, the individual will be assigned to a lawyer.

6. Representation - The assigned lawyer will provide legal representation to the individual, which may include negotiating with health care providers, filing lawsuits, and representing the individual in court.

7. Costs - The program's services are provided at no cost to the individual. However, there may be some costs associated with the legal process, such as filing fees or court costs. The program will cover these costs if the individual is eligible.

8. Contact - For more information about the program's services, individuals can contact the program's intake staff at (800) 368-1019 or visit the program's website at www.nhlp.org.