

In 1994, Kentucky enacted an “any willing provider” law which states that “health care benefit plans sh

In Kentucky Association of Health Plans, et al. v. United Healthcare of America, the state law was preempted b

The industry appealed the case to the United States Supreme Court and argued to the Court that the EF

In a unanimous decision, the Supreme Court recently affirmed the Sixth Circuit opinion and, thus, the an

The industry also argued that the law did not regulate an insurance practice but rather affected the relati

The case is significant because a number of states have enacted any willing provider laws similar to the