

On May 11, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals issued its decision in Chirba v. Univ. of Pa., reversing a district court decision that had held that the Medicaid provisions of the Pennsylvania Constitution were unenforceable.

The court reviewed the Supreme Court's decision in Wright v. Board of Directors of the State of New York, 138 S.Ct. 1000 (2018), which held that the Medicaid provisions of the New York Constitution were enforceable.

The decision is extremely significant because it reverses a district court decision that had held that the Medicaid provisions of the Pennsylvania Constitution were unenforceable.
